PREFACE

THE plan of this treatise matured in the writer's mind while at work on his monograph "The Teaching of Modern Languages in the United States" (U. S. Bureau of Education, 1913) and is intended as supplementary to that. Eventually, so the plan is, there shall be a history of graduate instruction in modern languages in the United States, but that is a large undertaking and lies in the future. Owing, however, to the nature of the work, it is thought best to publish this portion of it here and now.

It is pleasant for one long and arduously engaged upon this work to find Professor Raymond Weeks speaking up for the need of such a work as this.[1] And indeed, the pleasant thing about the present undertaking is that not only have the men engaged in graduate instruction in modern languages most kindly, often at considerable pains, got together and submitted their bibliographies, but very many of them have in addition written a word of approval and encouragement. Only four of the 250 have had anything adverse to say. We shall not discuss their reasons.

In the Who's Who of the men who give graduate courses, it is hoped much satisfaction will be taken by the men themselves. It has been felt that since the mathematicians, economists, medical men, psychologists, philosophers, and some others are listed in "American Men of Science" along with the science men, and since the teachers of education have a favored place in the Reports of the U. S. Commissioner of Education, the modern language men are almost the last to be without a Who's Who of their own. This part of our work should not only be of great usefulness to educators but equally so to graduate students in modern languages who wish to pursue their studies intelligently.

The statistical tables may prove useful in the same way. These tables should also have the approval of the various schools themselves, since the data were got either directly from the schools by questionaire, or from the latest attainable catalogs, and, moreover, the proof was in every case submitted to the schools for corrections.

Only schools have been included which have an enrollment of 25 or more graduate students.[1] If, however, it turned out that there is no real graduate work in modern languages in one of the institutions, it was dropped from the list. This left a list of the 42 schools now included in the tabulations, and in the Who's Who.

1 Educational Review, Vol. 46, pp. 400-403, 1913.

1 Data taken from the Report of the U. S. Commissioner of Education, 1912. Vol. II, pp. 272ff.

TABLE I.

The caption "Strong Lines of Work" in Table I was filled in by the schools themselves, when so inclined, since the writer could not presume to judge between various men and lines of work as to their preeminence, although in many cases he might have formed a private opinion. It is to be desired that for the convenience of other schools, as well as prospective graduate students, each school tend in the course of time to stand for excellence, if not preeminence, in certain branches of work, as is the case, for instance, in the German universities.

The caption "Number of instructors in the department" includes such as give one or more graduate courses in modern languages.[2] In a few schools there are men in other departments who give courses which are important for graduate students in modern languages. Such men are tabulated, together with their courses, etc., in Table IV.

TABLE II.

The data concerning the general library of the schools were taken from the Report of the U. S. Commissioner of Education,[3] and the estimates of departmental libraries, as well as the other data contained in Table II, were obtained from the schools by questionaire.

TABLE III.

As in the case of the other tables the latest catalog obtainable was used in all cases. The catalog which was used is indicated in column 2 of Table III. The caption "Persons offering" etc., again includes only instructors who give one or more graduate courses. The caption "Strong related departments in the School" includes only departments which are closely related to the study of modern languages, i. e., comparative philology or literature. In case there is a considerable amount of such work offered in the school, it is exhibited in full in TABLE IV, where the scheme of the Who's Who is carried out except that the man's published works are not given.

TABLE V.

The data in this table were derived from the schools by questionaire. Where the institution chose to do so, the degrees were distributed according to the years when granted. Otherwise they were totalled under the caption: A. M.'s (or Ph. D.'s) 1908-9 to 1912-13.

2 By modern languages is meant foreign modern languages.

3 Report U. S. Commissioner of Education, 1912. Vol. II, pp. 316ff. The figures include the bound volumes only.

THE WHO'S WHO.

As noted above, only those instructors in the 42 schools listed in the tables, who give one or more graduate courses, are included in the Who's Who, although there are a few scholars in the country who deserve to be found there independently of, or in spite of, a school.

Which courses are graduate and which are not is in very nearly every case clearly stated by the catalog. The rule followed is: a course not marked in the catalog as "primarily for graduates" or "for graduates" was counted as under-graduate. In the larger universities there is a plethora of rather advanced courses, but which are taken prevailingly by under-graduates. Such courses could not be counted as graduate without basely lowering the standard of graduate work. Summer term courses are not taken into account, because in one way or another, they are almost invariably included in the regular courses, and the work of a few outside lecturers in summer schools is not thought of sufficient importance in the scheme of graduate modern language instruction to merit inclusion.

The courses given under each man's name include the graduate courses he is giving. The names of the courses were taken from the catalogs and each man was invited to make additions in the proof sheets, if desirable. The bibliographical data were obtained from the men. In a few cases where no answers could be obtained, even after two requests, it was necessary to depend upon Who's Who in America. But since a man generally takes good care to have his sketch in that book favorable, it may be considered equally favorable here. And finally each man received the proof of his sketch with the invitation to correct it and to make additions.

If, therefore, there are omissions, it may be presumed the persons concerned chose to make them. However, the writer feels confident that in no case is there any work of great importance omitted, since all possible helps have been used even to supplement the memory or the records of the individuals. A few men sent no titles.

The following data are given concerning each person: His name, highest academic degree (not honorary), present rank, and name of school where employed. A "W" opposite his name indicates that his name is found in Who's Who in America[1]. Next: graduate courses given by him, and his published works. These last are arranged under four heads: 1. Author, under which are arranged all original books. 2. Editor, under which is listed all editorial work. (Since many of the books edited have importance only for pedagogy but hardly for scholarship, the number of pages which a book contains was not given in this caption). 3. Translator. 4. Contributor; under which are given the references to all other contributions. The lines of research into which these articles fall, chiefly, is indicated, but space did not warrant writing out the title of each article, nor the pages where found. The worth of an article, it is thought, does not depend upon its length. Moreover, the standing of the journal where the article appears tells considerable as to the worth of the article. Volume and year are given for the purpose of identification. Book reviews were not listed. They are of such varying importance that it was thought of meagre value to give the references. Where notices of such reviews were sent in, a statement "Book reviews" or "Numerous book reviews" was appended to the bibliography. Other data, such as given in American Men of Science, which were very desirable, was excluded for want of space. New data sent in by men listed in the Who's Who, concerning advance in rank, added courses, etc., were added to the Who's Who, but changes in the department as a whole, which were more recent than the catalog on which we based, could not be incorporated in the Tables without upsetting the whole scheme. This work was done principally in 1913, and the latest catalogs then available were used.

[1] Names which will be found in the next edition of Who's Who in America were included if so reported to us.

In some cases not all the data desirable about a book or article are given, because we depended on the men to supply them in the proof sheets. This some failed to do. It was then too late to look up all the references, because of the limited time remaining before the bulletin had to appear.

If this little work contributes to the advancement of graduate modern language work, the writer will have achieved his aim. Any addenda, or material relative to the greater work alluded to in the foregoing, will be thankfully received.
